

Site Review Notes

Project Title: Marie Curie

Sophie,

I'm super impressed with how the site looks right now. I'm loving the font style choices and the additional imagery for each subpage. Just a couple of notes and suggestions:

1. Responsive Navigation Bar: I like the placement and how the subheadings grow in size when hovered over. I did notice that the subheading links look a little strange at smaller screen size, so I did want to point that out as a place to maybe had some media query css to make the font size smaller and make sure that the links stay within the grey navigation bar area. I see that the links also open into a new tab, but I think with the website it might be better to just have the subpage change within the same tab for the final version.
2. Content for Legacy: I think the vertical organization of her prizes is working great. If possible, I would like a short "blurb" description of what each prize is and what lead to her getting the prize; I think this would help others get a better context of each prize it since (for example) most people don't really know that the Franklin Medal or that it is given by the American Philosophical Society.
3. General Responsiveness: Right now, it looks like there is some min-width constraint which I think does work but I'm not sure if it would look perfectly on a mobile/phone device (might be a lot of pinching/scrolling). If you have the time, I would like to see if the content information can be presented in a single-column style (at least for a mobile device width range).

As always, feel free to reach out on Slack if you have any questions or would like input on something.
